

ADVANCING TO CANDIDACY

Students who have completed all requirements except the dissertation and who have passed the Doctoral Oral Qualifying Exam are Doctoral Candidates and have earned the C.Phil. degree; they are a “Candidate in Philosophy” (also known as “ABD,” which short for “all but dissertation”). You may advance to candidacy as early as the Spring of your third year, and you must advance to candidacy by the end of the Spring quarter of your fourth year.

Students who fail to advance to candidacy on time will no longer be in good standing. While this does not affect the ability to teach in Fall of the fifth year, such students may not enroll, or TA, in the Winter. They may not enroll or TA again until advancement.

The advancing to candidacy process is relatively unstructured and involves the difficult task of arriving at a dissertation topic. As such, the department requests that, immediately upon completion of the Proposition, a student select an official interim advisor who will help guide them through the initial stages of the advancing to candidacy process until they have appointed an official dissertation committee. When a faculty member agrees to be a student’s interim advisor, the department’s Graduate Advisor(s) should be informed by the student. The interim advisor need not be the student’s proposition advisor nor the student’s ultimate dissertation advisor but should be someone whom the student takes to be suited to guiding them through the advancing process. Faculty may put conditions on being an interim advisor, and there is no presumption that any given faculty member will be the interim advisor for more than one student. If students do not succeed at finding an interim advisor, the department’s Graduate Advisor(s) will be their default interim advisor.

Earning the C.Phil degree, and so “advancing to candidacy,” requires, in addition to the completion of all degree requirements except the dissertation, a certain amount of paperwork. This document explains that paperwork.

Coursework Completed

Assuming that you have in fact completed all your degree requirements, except the dissertation and the oral exam, you must make sure that this fact is documented with the department, with the registrar, and with Graduate Division.

To this end, review the degree requirements, your transcript, and/or your Degree Progress Report (“check-off sheet”), to ensure that your coursework is both complete and recorded as such. Pay particular attention to any requirements you (think you have) satisfied by petition. If in doubt, confirm with the Graduate Advisor(s).

Committee Appointed, officially

Officially, “Doctoral committees are appointed by the Dean of the Graduate Division, acting for the Graduate Council, upon nomination by the chair of the department or interdepartmental program committee, after consultation with the student. The committee must be appointed prior to holding the oral qualifying examination.” (Standards and Procedures for Graduate Study, pg. 17.)

What this means is that, before you take your Doctoral Oral Qualifying Exam, your committee must be officially “constituted” by the Dean of the Graduate Division.

To start the process, simply approach faculty members to see if they would agree to serve on your committee. Committees are required to have four members, two of whom are tenured. The default is that the four committee members are from the department, but for the precise rules governing this and the possibility of members from outside UCLA, consult the Standards and Procedures for Graduate Study, here:

Once four people have agreed to serve on your committee, the SAO will submit a “Nomination of Doctoral Committee” form on your behalf. To this end, send to the SAO a list containing the names of the relevant
